

Have you ever imagined sharing a third of your birthday with two other siblings? Well, Braden, Colton, and Kes Bledsoe (12) are used to this because they are our school's set of triplets. Braden says "there are many cons about being a triplet, like sharing everything, but there are many pros like if you forget your textbook you can use your siblings," said Bledsoe. According to Colton, his favorite part about being a triplet is, "It has shaped me to be competitive and be very selfish, which will help me in this competition-driven world, so I can stand out," said Bledsoe. Both Braden and Colton agree that "you get to know your sister's friends, which can get us dates," said Braden and Colton. Kes agrees mostly with her brothers, meaning "I like that we share stuff like textbooks, if we forget ours, but I often become frustrated cause we share a lot of things like time with our parents, and space in the house, and the car," said Kes. Although being triplets has its ups and downs, Kes, Braden, and Colton would not have it any other way.

Since Biven Chapman (12) was six years old, she has competed in Cowboy Mounted Shooting. "When I was little, and still to this day, I practice by dry firing blanks in my kitchen," said Chapman. Biven has competed and won in many national and world events. "Some of my competition wins include the 2018 AQHA World Champion, and 2018 U.S. Central Championship Overall Cowgirl," said Chapman. "Currently, the event I participate in is a timed event where you use two .45 caliber pistols, loaded with black powder blanks. To win my event you must shoot targets in a specific pattern, and in the fastest time," said Chapman. Biven hopes to continue Cowboy Mounted Shooting after high school, as well as into college and after college.

Brynn Robenstein (12) is an athlete, not uncommon; however, his sport is as he does caving. Robenstein has been caving for seven years. He said "I cave in conditions with a 300 foot vertical descent. I am a member of the Colorado Mountain Grotto." Colorado Mountain Grotto is an organization dedicated to the exploration and preservation of caves and bats. "I spend a few hours a month in Williams Canyon digging and finding new caves to explore." Williams Canyon is a cave being explored in Manitou Springs. "I have $2,000 dollars in ropes, wet suits, and climbing gear. "My climbing gear consists of clamps, my helmet, head lamp, and my gloves to protect my hands," said Robenstein.

Ever since Donavon Carroll (12) could walk he has been snowboarding. "From the beginning I knew I loved snowboarding, something about being free, and the mountain wind," said Carroll. Donavon goes up to the mountains every weekend to practice: "When I am in the mountains, I practice my rails, my jumps, and my tricks." Because he is very dedicated and is able to go up to the mountains every weekend, he has the skill to participate in many competitions. "I have been to a variety of competitions like the Dew Tour where I competed in slopestyle, the Toyota Open where I competed in halfpipe," said Carroll. "Snowboarding is my life, and I am excited what the future will bring for me as well as the sport with the new evolving tricks," said Carroll.
