Freshman Juliana Hayward is an amazing soccer player. She became interested in soccer because, "after a long day at school it just gets my mind off of everything and it is fun for me, also I feel like I can express my personality through soccer." Hayward has had so many great accomplishments in her ten years of soccer. Her favorite memory was in August when she was called into multiple U.S. soccer camps for youth fourteen age group. Soccer is such an interesting and different sport, not getting to one's hands sounds so challenging. The fact that she was a freshman and was called into multiple U.S. soccer camps was something that she should be really proud of. Getting such an amazing opportunity as a freshman is something to be truly thankful for. Hayward is getting a chance to do something that only comes once in a lifetime for some kids. To experience this at such a young age can have such a great impact on the rest of your life. Hayward used this experience to motivate her to continue her soccer career and gave her things to learn from. Knowing that she can get this far at such a young age gave her the confidence to continue her career and to maybe even play throughout college. At such a young age, Hayward had already accomplished great things, and certainly has a reason to be proud of her achievements. copy by elizabeth bouchard-miller and hannah bachus
