DIG PURPLE

COST

Like Father Like Son. Trick or Treat Street is an exciting annual event to get both young and old in the Halloween spirit. Lots of children came to play games, eat candy, and show off their costumes. Many students helped out by setting up and running the activities. One student in particular, Peter Alman '20, worked at Frankenstein's Lab with StuCo. As waves of children flowed through the StuCo room, Peter saw a child dressed as a banana. "Because I was dressed as a banana, it was like he was my son," Peter laughed. Frightening Face. National Art Honors Society created a scary face for children to play with. Seniors Ashley Renzelman and Valeria Jimenez '19 showed the kids how to use the spooky prop and gave out candy.

There are many activities and booths at Trick or Treat Street. While at the National Spanish Honors Society stand, Viv Olivas Herrera ' 20 advertised the pulseras that were being sold. At the cakewalk, Drew Hausmann '21 was very excited to have finally won the pumpkin pie after three tiring rounds.

spooky
spiritThe Drama Club hosts the annual Halloween Costume Contest to help the club pay for their trip to Thescon. Many students, such as Katri Nielsen ' 20 and Keeandra Birch '19 welcomed the chance to dress up during the school day.

TRIM LINE
$---\frac{1}{1}$
YOUCANT TAKE TTWITH YOU
The first play of the school year leaves the cast and audience light-spirited and laughing. The production was unique amongst the past plays, being comically driven. Lead, Kaely Reece '19, felt that "we really needed a comedic play just because a lot of us have participated in such dramatic, more intense shows. I feel like to round us out as actors we need to have both sides of the spectrum."
Micah Hawk '19, who played the Grand Dutchess Olga Katrina, was one of the many cast members who had to work hard to create believable, comical characters.

"You Can't Take It With You" holds a special place in the cast's hearts for several reasons. For Reagan Hawk '21, the play was her first major production. "It was an eye-opening experience," Reagan reminisced, "I learned a lot about acting from the upperclassmen since they have more experience with it." Elliot Newman '19, AJ James '20, and Casey Schaffer '20 were some upperclassmen who helped Reagan since they have been in drama productions since junior high.

Costume King. Disguised as Napoleon Dynamite, Paddy Bins '19 takes first place in the Costume Contest. The second and third place winners came from junior high: Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, and a panda.

powt NeGATVE

"I really think the blood drive is a really good way for us, as kids, to make a difference Also I'm really scared of needles and I wanted to overcome that fear," explained Sarah Kelso '20.

Hoping to do some good, Amanda Mader '21, claims that she "wanted to donate because I like the idea of being able to help people, even if I'm not directly involved."

The reason Sam Franson '20 donates blood is because she knows "it's for a really good cause, because blood, it can go anywhere. It goes to anyone with cancer or having surgery."
"I just think that if you can give people another shot at life, then you should go for it," said
Michelle Le '19 even though she was unable to donate blood herself.

During her donation, Rebecca Pallotta '20 nearly blacked out but stuck it out until the end and stated, "I kinda just wanted to see what it was like and also people need blood."

EXPLODING BANANA bonanza

 FERBreze. Math class with Mrs. Ferb is always a little interesting, but on November 6 it is especially so. Both Josh Hare and Jack Smith '19 brought in squishy, stretchy bananas and were hitting each other with them when Josh's banana broke. A cloud of the fine white powder used as filling in the banana settled over the classroom, causing fits of coughing and laughter. Not only did the powder get everywhere, but it smelled bad too, so some students like Evan Lundberg '19 resorted to covering their faces. Responsibly, Ed Stober '19 got a vacuum to clean up the mess, but within seconds of turning it on, it started burning and smoking. Adding to the chaos, the fumes from the vacuum made the already gross smelling classroom even worse. To try and make the situation better, Jerome Dinakar '19 grabbed some Febreze in an attempt to make the room smell

Jam Session. Part of the art collaboration was music. Sophie Gordon and Sarina Nichols '19 enjoyed quality time together by singing and playing a guitar. Artistic Touch. Displaying her own artwork to represent kindness, Sydney Scarboro '21 describes her favorite part of the event "was actually collaborating with the elderly folks. I got a chance to meet a 92 year old woman who loved to paint, so being able to work with her and share ideas and making the picture was really nice."

Be Bolulice

Defying gravity, Ford Krout '21 gets advice from his sister, Sophia Krout '22. In order to move ahead, Ford had to get his feet up higher to grab the next hold.

Rock On! The climbing team practices every Tuesday and Thursday. The climbers practice to get ready for various competitions and some climb just for fun. To get stronger, Scott Airhart '21 attempts a hard boulder. Other climbers, like Cayden Claeys, Sebastian King, and Andrew Baker ' 21 use ropes to climb the highest wall to get the full climbing experience. Sam Boselli, Colton Ingalls, Paddy Bins '19, and Ms. Morris discuss how to get up a route.

Dazzling Designs. The Sunrise Art Collaboration is held at the Sunrise Senior Living Center. Students were given a quote to create an art piece displaying their interpretation of the quote. Jacob Crookston '21 and his younger siblings admired the various art that was on display. One of the participants, Taylor Navarette '21, showed off her glamorous artwork to her friends and other participants.

