

STUDY PLAYLIST

Senior Hunter Rope listens to a playlist called, "Outlaw Country" while studying. Rope cares about the US and said, "Listening to my playlist while studying helps remind me of freedom in America." photo courtesy of hunter rope.

HELP ALL AROUND Junior Abigail Waller talks about how the study group benefits her. Waller said, "Especially the group chat because then if you have a question you can ask everyone at once instead of asking one specific person who could be wrong." photo by rylee neal

Junior Sophie Ramsey has made her own playlist to listen to while she studies. Ramsey said, "I listen to music mostly because it keeps me from getting stressed out or over thinking so I tend to get my work done faster."

Sophomore Kaden Hoffman listens to the radical records playlist while studying for his upcoming tests. Hoffman said, "I listen to music while studying helps me focus and just like block out background noise." photo courtesy of kaden hoffman

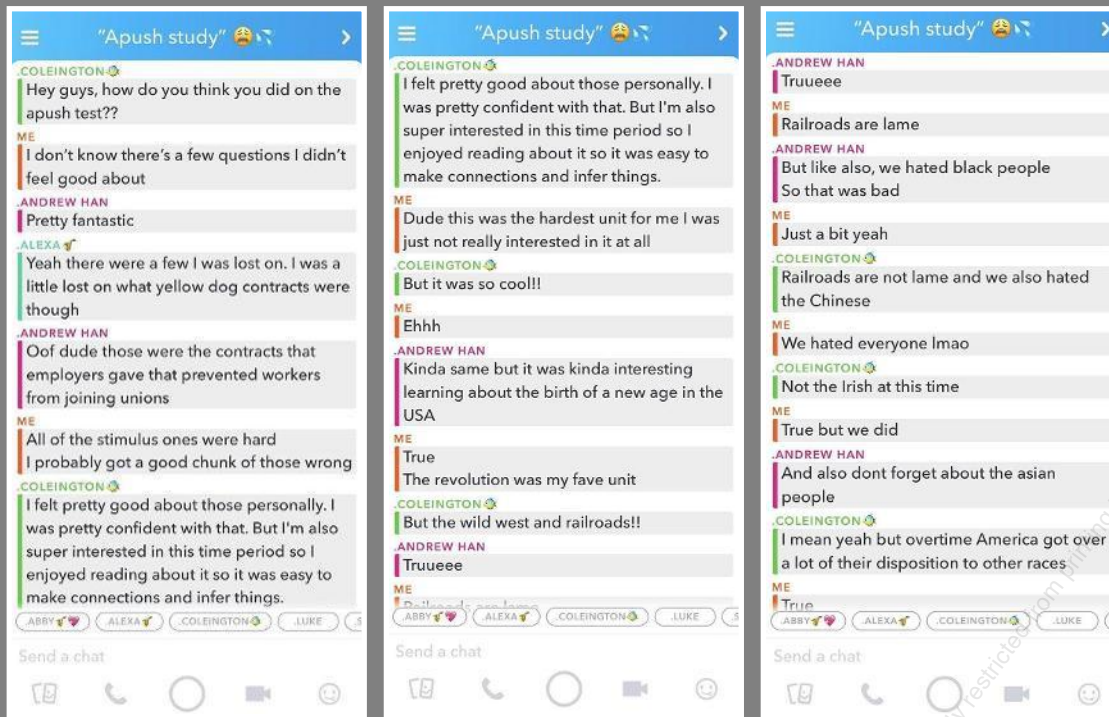

STUDY GUIDES SAVE LIVES Junior Jordan Read mostly uses the study guides she is given in class to study. Read said, "We go over all the terms that are on the study guide and that really helps." Junior Shane Johnson doesn't study too often, but when he does, he does it with friends. Johnson said he studies, "Not like super super often, but usually before big tests," when asked how often they study. photos by rylee neal

Freshman Ava Klein listens to Mood Booster when she studies. Klein said, "This playlist helps me study because it motivates me to keep going and put in effort to get good grades." photo courtesy of ava klein

PUSH

DO YOU LIKE APUSH?

RAILROAD RUNDOWN Juniors, Alexa Fiore, Coleton Nash, Jordan Read, and Andrew Han all had the APUSH test and some were very unsure of how they did. Nash texted the group chat to find out how well everyone did. Read, was over all happy but, "There's a few questions that I didn't feel good about." Having the opportunity to talk to people after the test and explain their problems helped this group.

AP US History Sunday Study Group

Legacy's known for the academics and achievements that the students have had over the years. This past year Legacy offered eighteen AP courses with a total of 1,897 students out of 2,383 students enrolled in AP classes. Every student had their own way to achieve these highest standards. Students studied alone, with a couple of people, met with teachers, and some even made study groups. One specific study group was for AP United States History (APUSH). Even though they didn't study and meet everyday, they met before every unit test and would talk everyday. They would meet the Sunday before a test at a nearby Starbucks with their study guides in one hand and a coffee in the other. Junior Coleton Nash said, "I feel that studying with peers helps more than studying alone because then you can bounce ideas off and see if I'm right." Another junior Abigail Waller said, "[The study group helps] especially because then you can ask everyone at once instead of asking one specific person." Multiple people believed that studying with more than just themselves helped higher there test scores because they could learn from one another. Using a group to study also helped them because they would push one another to study as much as possible. They would even make quizlets or kahoots and bet candy bars to whoever could beat the top score.

Having had a group to study with helped this team tremendously. This group had to learn time management because they had six other classes that they had to study for on top of Apush. One specific class that most of them had to work on was marching band but they were able to find a way to juggle that along with their other classes. Junior Alexa Fiore said, "I study when I'm not doing wind ensemble or something band related, so I try to study every night." copy by alexis noreen.

THING FOR AN