be vulnerable

Color Guard is the artistic side of marching band. Guard members work hard to make their emotions speak through their lively makeup and dramatic performances. Emotions are what give the audience a personal attachment to the story that they are trying to tell. To achieve this, guard members have to be vulnerable, letting their smiles, tears and twirling flags steal the show.

- 1. Embrace Emotions Bringing every piece of her heart out onto the field during the Embrace performance, Shelby Wright (10) said, "I felt determined through the whole performance. And happy and nervous. Unity is really cool, because everyone comes together in the guard and band. I always have a blank mindset, but at the same time I think about what I need to do better than all the times before. I was so happy that we did so amazing on our last performance." Though this is Wright's second year as a guard member she states, "This was the first year without Michael and it was tough, but even without my brother there, I know guard is my life and I have so much passion for it. I feel at home spinning and band is the best place to be."
