Voice Over

Cancer can happen to any family at any time, but Aundre and his family are battling back. Aundre was diagnosed with leukemia back in April of 2019. This cancer attacks red blood cells that allows oxygen to travel throughout the body.

After the diagnosis, his family knew that treatment would be necessary. Unfortunately going through treatments can take up most of the day.

To get treatments, Aundre was hooked up to an IV. To pass the time they have all found some activities they enjoy.

Aundres treatments are not always close to home. He and his family actually live in Alamosa, Colorado, but travel for their appointments.

Unfortunately, Aundres older brother Ian could not be at the interview, but still shows his support and strength for his family. With the strength of each other and the support of other family and friends, their time battling Aundre's leukemia has been a lot easier.

A special thanks to the Ronald McDonald House for housing Aundre and his family, along with the other families staying in other houses across the country. Leukemia has struck thousands of lives. And families like this one are putting everything they have into fighting it. This is why Rampart came together every year and shaves or cuts their hair to support the fight. Bald for Bucks can help end childhood cancer, so sign up and donate today.
