who said Robin with my friends and there was a family of four next to us, and the mom kept getting mad at her two little kids over the smallest things so I paid for their meals. That night, the mother posted on Facebook and Instagram thanking me for doing that and explained how bad her day was," Nearpass said

"I typically pay for people when what to be going through something, but other times I'll just do it at random just to be nice," Nearpass said.

why do it because there's so much negativity in the world that paying for someone's meal or the person behind you in line is so simple, but so effective and can make their day," Nearpass said.
