 Students in AP Photography use art to express identity. "I think it's important for students and children to have a voice in their community because we are the future. We're the ones who have to take better care of not only our oceans, but Earth. We are the only hope the world has and we can make a change," Madelyn Marsh (12) said.

Speaking Up At The Capital "It's important that students have a voice in their community because I feel like as teenagers, our opinions often get dismissed, which is totally backwards because we are the future. Therefore, we should definitely have a say in what goes on in our communities," Nora Hamroun (11) said.

Advocating On Social Media "It is so important to have my voice heard because it makes you feel as if you are a part of a group or in the decision that is being made. I try to express my opinion either by social media or through talking and discussing with my friends and family," Marshall Davis (10) said.
