What do you do on Fridays?

On the Friday before Thanksgiving break, students gathered around to celebrate Thanksgiving. According to John Harsh ('21), the primary reason for meeting together was not because of the holiday, but for the sole fact that they were hungry.

The group originally planned for 6 people to attend the feast, but they ended up with 11. For Thanksgiving, "We all stormed Safeway and bought lunch," said Maxwell Ketter ('21), another participant in the Thanksgiving feast. They had gotten, "three rotisserie chickens, one key lime pie, a few two litre sodas, a few 12 packs [of soda], [Ethan Chambers'] mashed potatoes, microwave mac n' cheese, and Chambers' stuffing," said Ketter.

The feast took place during all three lunch blocks. There were a few of those celebrating who actually ditched class to celebrate together, although those involved refused to say who.

The whole experience was off-the-cuff and unplanned, for the most part, as almost twice the amount of people planned participated in the feast. After the Thanksgiving feast participants were full because they had actually managed to eat most of what they originally brought. Leftover, they "had an entire chicken, two pieces of key lime pie, soda, and a ton of stuffing and mashed potatoes," explained Henry Shallenberger ('21).

They didn't want to waste anything so they tried to hand the extra stuff to teachers and students they knew around the school. Of course, they tried to give science teacher Jack LaCarruba food, but LaCarruba didn't trust anything they were trying to get rid of, so they had to move on.

In the end, Shallenberger said, "The chicken went to Mr. [Cameron] Ryan, and Dr. [Michael] Huntington got the pie." Satisfied with their feast, they were able to clean up and waste little.

Ethan Chambers (21) said, "We didn't really plan the event outside of a small group of us, but on the day when we were having the feast, our group doubled in size." The group had food ranging from a rotisserie chicken, key lime pie, pumpkin pie, to mashed potatoes.
