Mo Khan '20 made herself who she is today through her culture and confidence. She came to Rock Canyon from a diverse private school as the only hijabi and was still able to keep her identity.

"It's just important to stay true to yourself, I'm going to be who I want to be, I don't really care what people say," Khan said. "I also feel like a part of manifesting confidence comes from having good people around you."

Khan and her sister also created their own business. "My sister started with YouTube and then we created a photography business called Mango Tree Films, it's called that because my grandpa, who lives in Pakistan, has a mango tree in his yard."

Khan also started the South Asian Student Association to create a safe place for underrepresented students at Rock Canyon.

"We noticed that there is a large population of South Asian students at Rock Canyon that's been continually growing, so we created the club to have a safe space to socialize, talk about our culture, and just interact with each other," Khan said. "I think it's important that it's open to all students while its main goal is to serve the South Asian students we still want to welcome everybody to inform them on our culture."

From starting a business, to creating a club, to advocating for a community, Mo Kahn brings her individuality, culture, and passion to all those around her.
