One day in the life of the Falcons

Usually when a parent asks their kid, "What did you do at school today?" they get a response of, "Nothing." But that can't be said of a day at Euclid.

From chatting with friends outside before school to the honor roll celebration at night, Feb. 11, 2020, was a jam-packed day. In just one day, the 750 Euclid students learned, socialized, played in the snow, and participated in after school activities.

Elements photographers worked to capture one day at Euclid from start to finish.

- Photographers saw:
- Work on 7th grade language arts biographies projects;
- A guest speaker in health;
- People joking around in class;
- Mr. Borel having fun with his students in gym;
- 6th graders auditioning for the musical;
- Core + classes learning about the National Junior Honor Society Pennies for Patients fundraiser;
- 2D art learning how to use watercolor techniques; and
- 6th grade science lab.

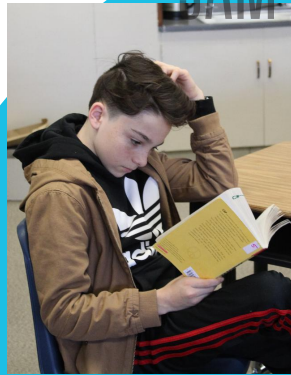

Students say their days have variety.

"I would describe my day as interesting because there's usually a variety of things that I do during the day," said Sophia Pratte, 7.

Reading Between the Lines. Focusing on reading, Archimedes Gordon, 7, learns about being individual and unique from the book Schooled. Language arts offered students a chance to read what appealed to them. Photo by Peyton Krumm

Word for Word. Acting her heart out, Analicia Borjas, 6, auditions for the 6th grade musical, 101 Dalmatians. She worked hard to land an exciting role. Photo by Zandria Kathol

Seeing CNN. Watching the news in Ms. Rogers' class, students learn about world events. Many social studies classes include learning about current events through the program CNN10. Photo by Emilia Martinez

Creative Thinking. Writing his thoughts, Alex Putland, 6, works on an assignment in math. Math teachers used a variety of techniques to teach - from individual work to group work to games and online activities. Photo by Aytan Lim
