THE SHOW MUST GO ON

The Advanced Acting class had to find creative solutions to their problems this year. Normally attending conferences, competitions, and auditions, this year, they were stuck at home. Using the magic of the Internet, the theater kids were able to bring the magic of the stage home. With online conferences, pre-recorded performances, and FINALLY a live, though distant, performance. Here, Mrs. Ambroz, along with Judd Brau, So., Meghan Lawson, Sr., Brady Gossage, Jr., Stephen Myers, So., Izzie Williams, So., Sam Heinz, So., Wren Fortier, So., and Domonic Hall, Jr., play around with virtual backgrounds to make the acting seem a little more 'real.'

MAKE THE WORLD THEIR STAGE

Maile Sufak has made a name for herself in the theater throughout high school. She has committed to Hawaii Pacific University in Honolulu and will major in international business. Although her major may be a world away from what many know her for, she plans to still be a part of the theater as she's attending school with an International Local Ensemble Scholarship, entailing studying music from a foreign country, and traveling to perform in the respective country. Despite this year's effects on theater production, Maile has come to "[understand] the importance of seeing other people's work," and "appreciate live productions." She has also appreciated this year because she was able to learn more methodology and focus on individual practice. She is also "excited for the promise of live productions and the changing theater industry" after Covid.

Meghan Lawson, Sr.

Meghan Lawson has been a mainstay on the Coronado stage ever since she snagged the role of Cinderella. Since then, she has been involved in many projects. "My favorite play was 'The Curious Savage.' It was a phenomenal cast, we all worked so well together, and we all loved the story we got to tell about love, kindness and friendship." While she does have a favorite play, she doesn't "have just a single favorite memory from theatre, but I have my favorite moments! I love waiting in the dark wings with fellow excited cast mates as we listen to the audience chatter before the show. Or the bittersweet ending to a show where we tear down the set and then talk (and cry a little) about what we learned and how much we grew together. Theatre and creative and empathetic people who are involved bring me incredible joy, and I am so grateful to Mrs. Ambroz and the CTD for four wonderful years!" As for her future in acting, "I plan on pursuing theatre and acting in college, but I haven't decided where that will happen yet." She has offers and interest from many schools and any of them would be lucky to have her in the cast!

We were robbed. The theater department hasn't been able to put on a full-fledged show for over a year. Rather than let their excessive talents go to waste, Mrs. Ambroz has found ways to help the students grow their skills and find outlets for their acting bugs. Online productions and distanced rehearsals have become a new skill in the wide range of abilities that our theater kids regularly display.
