

alamosa KEY CLUB

Picking up trash, assembling art supplies, putting together a Story Walk, helping with the Splashland Race, laying gravel at new homes, packing Thanksgiving boxes, ringing bells for the Salvation Army and a food drive for the local food bank are all little things that members have been able to volunteer in while also following health protocols. The biggest project that has been accomplished this year was the Thirst Project, and fundraiser that raised money for third world countries so that they could build wells for clean water. Having a goal of $500, the club exceeded that amount by making a little over $1000 in donations. Alamosa Key Club was able to donate this to the Thirst Project and give others that opportunity to have clean water. No matter what, there is always a time to help out your community. Volunteering is just one step into building ones character and helping out your own community, and Key Club is the perfect club for doing just that.

Even in a time like the corona virus pandemic, there is always room for students to help out their community. Key Club is devoted to helping out others and making an impact for the world around them. Members must always be willing to volunteer and make a change in not only theirs, but other peoples lives. This year alone, Key Club has found ways that they can support the community even with the restrictions brought by Covid-19. It is what it is when it comes to helping the community.

The Eyes Have It:

Pictured right, Key Club sponsor, Wendy Willett, and Alamosa High School Kiwanis sponsor, Kathy Lee smile for a shot of them in their Key Club Shirts. Though we can't see their whole face, its easy to tell that they are smiling underneath those masks while happily volunteering for the community.
