

EMPTINESS

Rhea Wybrant, Fr., sits all alone in math class while Karusso Rosales, Jr., gets almost the whole cafeteria to himself for study hall. At least Rhea can get a lot of help from the teacher and Karusso won't have many distractions from his studies.

DOING WHAT WE CAN

Ben Davis, Jr., checks in on his Schoology assignments.

Mr. Hodur takes his choir practice outside.

Mr. Nottingham juggles online and in-person class.

We've all had to find new and creative ways to do what we need to do. The band kids have to practice outside and cut little slits in their masks so they can play! With half the band gone on any given day for most of the year, WebEx concerts became a daily thing.

Customer is allowed to have objects outside of the margin.

THE LONELINESS OF COHORTING

Nicholas Towney, Fr., sits alone in his class and reflects on the strange year. "It's a lot harder to get to know people." He also has kept aware of germs.

"I've been mindful of everything that I touch."

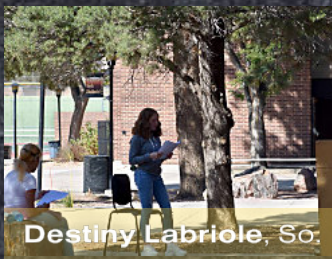

Haven't we all, haven't we all...

Going back to school eventually happened, but not like we've ever experienced before. When they wanted to bring us back to the building, but not all at once, we witnessed the birth of the cohort. Whether you were in Cohort A and came to school on Tuesdays and Wednesdays, Cohort B and came to school on Thursdays and Fridays, or Cohort C and never actually came to school, we all had to learn to adjust to the block plan and only seeing half of our friends.
