The Plan

Juniors start plans for college

Counselors met with their eleventh grade students at the beginning of the school year to discuss post-grad options and high school graduation requirements. "My junior conference was mainly focused on looking at colleges and talking about my plans for after high school," said Abby Winsor (11). Winsor had all of her questions about graduation credits answered and began researching nursing schools afterward. But for students who didn't know what they wanted to do, the conference was less about planning and more centered on exploration. "We guide them as to how they can get more information and more direction on how to explore options further and figure out what they want to do," said counselor Sameen DeBard. For Megan Richard (11), the junior conference was of utmost importance for her plans to graduate a year early. Her counselor helped her figure out what steps to take in order to graduate in May of 2022. "It's a lot less stressful than it sounds. They're there to help you, not interrogate you," said Richard (11).

Ahead of the game. Megan Richard planned to graduate early. She understood that taking extra classes would take more work but it would all be worth it. "If that means studying for physics late at night, then oh well," said Richard (11). Photo courtesy of M. Richard

The Real Picture. There are many misconceptions underclassmen make about junior year before they enter it. "While it is a pretty challenging year it's also a year to help create a sense of independence and grow in all aspects of your life," said Brackett (11). Photo courtesy of A. Brackett.

Clock is Ticking. At the end of the first semester, juniors were having to make life changing decisions. "One of the greatest things about being a junior is that by then you have a lot of stuff figured out, which makes things a easier," said Jordan Pettit (11). Photo courtesy of J. Pettit
