

It's change. It's growth. It's difference, and what that difference means to you. Every shift in your voice and new hairstyle is another testament to who you were and who you are. Endless lessons learned under fluorescents, memories made in the sun, and tears shed under LEDs led you here. Every day you go to bed learning more about yourself and who you are, someone unlike anyone else. You're remarkable in your nonuniformity. You look at things from an angle that's irreplaceable, and use your life, your lessons, to take on whatever lies ahead of you. You embrace your potential and set yourself up for things you can't even imagine. The question that remains to be asked, though, is who are you yet to become?

BEFORE THE HERITAGE FOOTBALL GAME, JACKSON BOCK, 12, gets hyped with his friends. Students were allowed to not wear masks while outside. "At football games it is very nice to not wear a mask. It makes it much easier to be loud and interact with the game. At school however, it makes more sense to wear a mask considering we are indoors. Everyone can agree it's not fun to wear a mask but at the end of the day it's something we all have to do," Bock said. Photo by S. Pallman.
