Quick eats. Instead of eating school lunch, many people take advantage of going off campus to get fast food. Emmary Gurka '24 is one of these people. Since there are so many establishments close to the school, students have plenty of lunch options. Gurka said, "I go off-campus for lunch because sometimes I crave something that is not served at school. I usually go about two times a week." Homestyle. Although fast food is a popular choice for most students, Cole

Young '24 prefers homemade food instead. "I like to make southern style foods like chicken fried steak and collard greens because it reminds me of home in Texas," he said. Young also likes to explore new foods; not just stick to familiar ones. Family fun. For some students like Hugo Saldana ' 24 , tradition is something that can be supported through food. He said, "every Christmas my whole family gets together and makes a bunch of tamales." Although this may seem simple, it is a fond memory for Saldana, and conveys the importance of family.

Ice scream, you scream. YoYogurt fan Madison McCorkle '23 loves going to the froyo spot whenever she can. "I love YoYogurt. It is just a very good snack to have any time of the day." McCorkle likes to hang out there with friends to spend quality time together. "All of my friends in the DP program just get to have fun conversations and hang out," McCorkle said.

Caramel delight. Dutch Bros is a very popular spot for drinks and Cailyn Jones '24 has hopped on the trend of going there frequently. She said, "My go-to order from Dutch is the Golden Eagle with extra caramel. It is not too sweet and it blends well with the caramel." Dutch Bros provides many sweet options and is a common coffee spot for high school students.

An apple a day. Some students, like Hansoul Jung '22 try to eat healthy whenever they can, whether it is out to eat or at home. "Out of the places where I usually go, my favorite is Panera," she said, "but usually I just pack myself healthy food for school." Fast food does not always have to be unhealthy, and Jung does her best to stay on the healthy side of things.
