when in doubt Determined to bring heightened spirits to the student body, the rowdies give it their all at fall sporting events.

On the edge. Watching the game while listening to the resonating crowd, Ali Jodeh '22 and Jackson Champagne '22 take their posts. Jodeh explains that in such crowds, "People see you and people like you and it's a different kind of energy, it's like a machine that's finally working correctly." Matching the energy of a crowd with your own equal energy is a daunting task, yet done in stride by the rowdies this year. Feeling the love. Cheering at the homecoming football game, Sydnee Iannoli '22 and Dagny Marques '22 beam under the Friday night lights. Iannoli shares, "One of my favorite memories I've made so far as a rowdy was during our first football game, I held up my hands in a heart-shape to show just how much I love this school and a huge chunk of the crowd did it back. I'm never going to forget it." Reminiscing on the homecoming game, lannoli cherishes the love emanating from the Dedication. Entranced with the game, Sophie Barlitt '22 devotes her energy to those around her, on and off field. Barlitt explains that as a rowdie, "When the crowd matches [our] energy, it's electric and it gets us all hyped up as well." Impacting the level of excitement within the study body is a tremendous job to undertake, whether games are won or lost Barlitt and her peers make sure to "pull through," and "get loud" with the crowd. Senior spirit. Standing solo at the first football game of the season, Jonathan Ellis '22 awaits the start of the first quarter and the noise that is sure to follow in the student section of the stands. Ellis shares, "Being a Rowdie promotes school spirit and honestly my favorite part about high school is cheering for everybody, and kind of just feeling the love." Closely following the coin toss, the game begins and Ellis embarks upon his rowdie mission.
