Strong, dedicated, and compassionate are just a few words to describe Regis Jesuit's varsity hockey team. Not only are they widely known on the ice for their skills, but also for their indestructible team bonding. The team prides themselves on their connections with each other and the brotherhood they have formed. Junior Connor Ihaia said, "The boys and I are buzzin," something they are known for saying with each other.

This connection with each other on and off the ice helps to create trust, loyalty, and effective communication skills that help them in matches. Sophomore

Zach Lorenzo says that creating a "safe place" and learning to trust each other is crucial to their performance.

"[I'm thankful] for all opportunities it has given me," said Reece Peterson '24. He recounts meeting his best friends on the team and traveling.

No matter the score, the team has incredible support and love for each other. This keeps their energy and spirits high. For whatever reason why the boys got into hockey, they are extremely grateful and indebted to the love, spirit, wins and losses this team has brought to them. As well as their "nasty flow" says Connor Ihaia.
