The fall colors in Alamosa represent Halloween and the cozy season that is on its way.

The many warm colors of leaves falling as kids have the one day of the year to pretend or dress up to be whatever they desire, to trick-or-treat, and taste the delicious flavors of fall.

People all around Alamosa have created traditions with the fall season, especially kids at the high school.

It has been a tradition for the high school students to attend as many of the haunted houses that are located all around town.

The thrill of not knowing what are in those houses is definitely the reason it is such an amusement for the students.

There are many other traditions that are seen throughout the town of Alamosa one of which is the house decorating.

There are many houses throughout town challenging one another to have the biggest and brightest Halloween lights and decor to help those traditions stay around for as long as possible. I recommend driving around the houses by the high school, they always have the best lights.

Many people drive around the town to watch the scary light shows that are here, which is one of many family or friends ways to hang out with each other.

This is also a Christmas tradition, but it has been carried over to Halloween.

Many other traditions have risen up from the fall season and Halloween.

It's not a surprise that pumpkin spice is on the top of the flavor list for fall. Many flavors are known for each season and without a doubt, the taste of pumpkin is at the top of the list.

When coffee shops release the Pumpkin Spice Latte, sometimes referred to as the PSL, Alamosans know that fall is here. It is not the drink in itself that people are excited about, it is also the fact that the drink symbolizes that fall is here.

As fall is already here, we all must do some things with our family and friends to create bonds which is what the coming seasons are known for.

If you're lucky enough to have a fire pit on your property, or know someone who does, this is the ideal time of year to use it! Just sitting around the camp fire with the family is always the best. Camp fire stories are also the best way to spend the night with friends or family.

There's nothing like roasting hot dogs, brats, or marshmallows over an open fire.

Be sure to take advantage now before winter comes and it's too cold. Fall makes it simple to relive your childhood. In addition to anticipating traditional fall events like going to pumpkin patches, apple orchards, haunted forests, and the State Fair

There are also more sophisticated autumnal activities like game days, mountain retreats, and hard cider crawls.

No other time of year is better for activities like navigating a corn maze, camping in the Rocky Mountains, or throwing a pumpkin carving and pie-making party.

There is a corn maze in La Jara every year that students and families all attend for a good time

One of those childhood pastimes we never fully tire of is pumpkin carving. Bring the pumpkins you selected at the patch and invite all of your pals over for a pumpkin carving party.

Once everyone has finished carving their monsters, ghosts, or other fall-themed carvings, arrange them in a line on the porch and take a photo. Throughout fall and the Halloween season, it is very important to have people to spend it with.

The Halloween movies are a must see during the Halloween season. Many movies are still coming out to this day including "Halloween Ends", A scary movie about Winnie The Pooh and many others. Horror movies are always a go to with family and friends.

Some activities I love to do during the fall season is watch football.

Without a doubt, College football is at its peak during the fall season. To Millions of people, college football is something they can not live without, and i totally agree with everyone who watches college football.

There is nothing more fall then sitting down with the family and watching football. As people cheer on their teams and socialize in their warm house, it is easy to get lost in the joy that come from bonding in fall football.

To go along with football, movies and shows are something anyone and everyone spends the extra time they have on.

Some of the most popular fall and Halloween movies include Hocus Pocus, Halloween Town, and any other scary movies that fit the scary movie genre. Some classics that everyone should watch include Ghost Busters, The Adams Family, Beetle-Juice, Gremlins and many others.

If you are feeling like watching shows instead of movies, you can for sure watch Halloween cooking shows, American Horror Story and any special edition Halloween add on to shows you may love.

To go along with the fall season, Thanksgiving is a family favorite holiday.

Thanksgiving is a time for everyone to unite and spend quality time with each other.

Thanksgiving is oftentimes one of the few holidays that entire families can come together and forget about their worries.

From eating delicious food to enjoying the last days of fall, there are plenty of things to do on Thanksgiving that don't involve spending much, if any, money

There are many things to do around Thanksgiving, like eating delectable food and catching up with loved ones.

Although Black Friday is one of the busiest shopping days of the year, not everyone wants to spend a lot of money over Thanksgiving weekend or stand in line for hours in the middle of the night. With family.
