

new to the crew

The impact of Student Council's new adviser, Ms. Alexis Bailey.

"She very much is a role model that you just want to make proud."

-Nathan Marion Galay '23

photo by: kacie cummings

A.M. to P.M. Laying down tarps and duct tape during the Homecoming dance set up, Louisa Wachter '24 glides across the gym. Wachter, a junior class representative, understands the pros and cons of setting up for large events. "We're all in this together, so even though [dance set up] is not always our favorite... we have breakfast together, play music, and everyone [gets] excited at that point," Wachter said. photo by: roewyn korwek

Set it up. Aashay Deshpande '24 fills up popcorn at a home football game. Student Council members maintain the high demand of keeping up with the organization and set up of Student Council events. Deshpande said, "I help with all the event planning. Most of the time I'm doing set up or concessions." photo by: roewyn korwek

Floating. Abigail Sprinz '25 puts finishing touches on a cloud decoration to hang in the gym for the Homecoming dance. "We put hours of effort into [the clouds], and seeing it all come together for a magical Homecoming was the best part," Sprinz said. photo by: roewyn korwek

We got spirit. Lucian Ensell '24 carries Mia Champagne '25 across the gym to showcase 'Anything But A Backpack Day' for Homecoming Spirit Week. As a sophomore on Student Council, Champagne gets to be a part of the planning of all events, including spirit days. "We find ideas online or come up with ideas [on our own], and we review it with the whole council," Champagne said. photo by: olivia alaska

behind the SCENAS

Student council undergoes a change in leadership and maintains an active role in the school culture.

Spread by: Kacie Cummings and Roewyn Korwek

From graduating seniors leaving last year to new advisory under Ms. Alexis Bailey, Student Council has undergone many changes this year. This year, Ms. Bailey has learned to balance advising Student Council and Yearbook while also teaching her other classes.

"Throughout my teaching career, I've always been busy... [but] I couldn't imagine myself doing anything else," Bailey said.

Rucha Katdare '25 gives examples of things outside of school that are done by the Student Council.

"[There is] definitely an in-school and out-of-school commitment; we use most of our time to plan events during the class period so we can dig deeper [outside of class]," Katdare said.

While many valuable skills like budgeting and planning are learned through the benefits of Student Council, Amanda Walsman '24 says the most important part is being able to change the school for the better.

"You really get to be involved with helping, sharing your ideas and other people's ideas, and become a real part of the school," Walsman said.

While Student Council is a big commitment, the satisfaction of seeing an event come together makes it all worth it.

"[Student Council's] fingerprints are all over the school. Pretty much every big event that you see and love is all made and organized by students," said Ethan Hardage '23. story by: roewyn korwek

people in POWER

The Student Body President and class presidents share aspects of their leadership roles.

"I'm the student body president in Stu Co. So I run classes, delegate jobs, and just oversee all of our events."
-Sydney Watts '23

photo by: kacie cummings

photo by: kacie cummings

"[As senior class president] I like when people come to me to ask what's going on in the school; I feel involved!"
-Alexandra Watts '23

"This year I've worked on Homecoming committee. Everyone contributes their ideas to [planning] and there are no bad ideas!"
-Prarthana Mathad '24

photo by: kacie cummings

photo by: kacie cummings

"I help with setting up the events, and also with bringing ideas from some of my friends who may want to improve the events!"
-Mark Suplisson '25

Beyond the profit. Executive Treasurer Aaron Tran '23, sells concessions at a football game. Tran handles the finances that are raised from Student Council organized events such as dances and community fundraisers. Tran says, "I take care of the money before, during, and after an event... I prepare all the money, and then count the money and fill out all the paperwork after." photo by: roewyn korwek

Upholding the legacy. Vacuuming the red carpets, Caleb Thompson '23 smiles as he makes the best of his responsibilities. Thompson, a first year student council member, decided to run to follow in his older sister's footsteps. "I would just come in and hang out [when my sister was here] and it seemed like a fun thing to be a part of," Thompson said. photo donated by: ms. alexis bailey

Head in the clouds. Aahana Paul '25 and Maya Deitrick '24 put finishing touches of star garland on the cloud decorations for Homecoming. Paul's decision to run for Student Council was sparked by her vision to make a name for herself among the student body. "I thought it was a cool thing that the students were able to have leadership in the school rather than just the teachers doing everything," said Paul. photo by: roewyn korwek