

SYNCHRONIZED

Senior Elio Herzog found a passion for winter guard in 7th grade. They then were able to join as an 8th grader, and have been on the team ever since. "We're all comfortable enough to be kind of weird together and hang out and have fun." said Herzog. photo by aiyana alfaro

FOCUSED

Sophomore Audrey Thorne completed her first year on the Legacy's orchestra program. "I made a lot of friends through it and just like the people there are really nice, it just adds value to my life," said Thorne. photo by aiyana alfaro

TRUST FALL

"It matches lyrically, basically I think they just had a vision and it went with the lyrics, and at first it was really scary but now it's just part of our show" said junior Bennett Campos, explaining how the fall adds excitement into the winter guard performance. photo by aiyana alfaro

LEADING THE TEAM

What is your role being a section leader?

...I think being in a leadership position and also just being an upperclassman I've tried to prioritize making sure I connect with younger students, I'm here to help them, I'm here to be their friend and also be a role model if they so choose to look up to me, but most important to me is being a positive person that they can go to and be friends with and ask for help.

Maia Miller,
Senior

...I feel like this year I have to try a little bit harder to do stuff right...I try to make everyone feel like they want to be there. The senior class last year made us feel like we wanted to be on the team and we were part of something, so I want them to feel that way.

Junior

A UNIQUE SKILL

Junior Tori Cluff has played the violin since sixth grade. "It's really enjoyable and it's a cool thing to learn how to do because you have a unique skill." said Cluff. photo by aiyana alfaro

AN OUTLET

Junior Brayden Albrecht has been playing the cello since fourth grade. Music to Albrecht has had a huge impact on his life, he uses it to relieve stress. "When we do have concerts it's something I look forward to because I get to dress up and play with my buddies." photo by aiyana alfaro

THE JOY OF CONCERTS

This was freshman Xan Constantine's first year on the winter guard team. "I don't really think about it but it's kind of exhilarating and it feels really good whenever you toss and catch and you get an applause," said Constantine. photo by aiyana alfaro

IMPACT OF MUSIC

"..It's been part of my life for a while and every time I play I just feel a lot better. It's kind of therapeutic." Junior Adelaide Plett has played the cello since fifth grade and her favorite song to play is La Folia. photo by aiyana alfaro

LISTEN TO THE MELODY

Legacy's orchestra and winter guard completed a tuneful year

Legacy's orchestra and winter guard community has yet again completed an amazing season. Both the winter guard and orchestra programs built a great community. The members of both teams support and help each other to succeed. Sophomore Nyla French was apart of orchestra. French said, "I think I've always just had a passion for it, I've always loved music and it's kind of a stress reliever. I think it just makes me happier as a person and when you're playing you can get a lot of emotions out depending on what exactly you're playing." Orchestra is able to help many people express themselves. Orchestra is an enjoyable fun class for senior Allison Jensen. "Its a break in the middle of the day for me, after doing all my really hard academic subjects I can just have a break and have a chance to express myself." Winter guard is also a great way for many students to express themselves and have fun. The team was great with helping each other out and being supportive. Freshman Logan Cohen joined the team this year with a welcoming community. "Everyone is super sweet and supportive and everyone knows what you do, and it can be intimidating but at the same time everyones just really sweet and wonderful." Altogether both teams have built amazing communities where students are free to express themselves. copy by jamie ferguson and aiyana alfaro

YOU GOT WHAT IT TAKES

Legacy orchestra students go to All State

This year, seniors Bevin Almblad and Ava Bustamant made it All State for orchestra. "It was really cool because I got to meet some friends that I'd seen in the years before... it was really fun," said Almblad. Bustamant described her experience as "...a pretty good feeling, I think it's really accomplishing and I'm really grateful for the opportunity". This gave both Bustamant and Almblad, an amazing opportunity to show off their musical talents and both hope to continue their music career after they graduate. photo by jamie ferguson
