

LOUD AND PROUD

Choir and concert band put on a show throughout practice and performance

Legacy's own choir and concert band has worked extremely hard all year through cooperation and coordination to compose incredible performances. Some musicians have been playing or singing for as long as they can remember. Choir member, sophomore, Jewelie Sehjal said, "According to my mom, I've been singing since before I learned how to talk." While others have only started being a part of a musical group. No matter the level of experience, the music departments allow everyone with a love of music to come together and perform. Sehjal said, "What makes choir so special is having the sense of community with people who love music as much as you do." Both choir and concert band are welcoming to all of those who have a passion for music. A member of Legacy's jazz band, sophomore Aiden Crump-Bertram, described why he likes playing music. "Specifically to jazz, I like being able to improvise and be unique about how I play." For the winter concert, both departments had to work together to put on a show for family and friends. However, some members felt they could've been more prepared for the show. Crump-Bertram said, "More play time in class would've helped. Sometimes we need to focus more." For the performances to come, the musicians will have to focus and work hard. Each year, both departments grow and develop into incredible ensembles. copy by abigail sibel

132
CHOIR AND CONCERT BAND

SINGING A WINTER WONDERLAND

During the winter concert, Senior Syvrina Renault had fun working with her friends to put on a show. "We got to do individual acts because it was a showcase type concert, which was really fun!" said Renault. photo by abigail sibel

PASSING IT ON

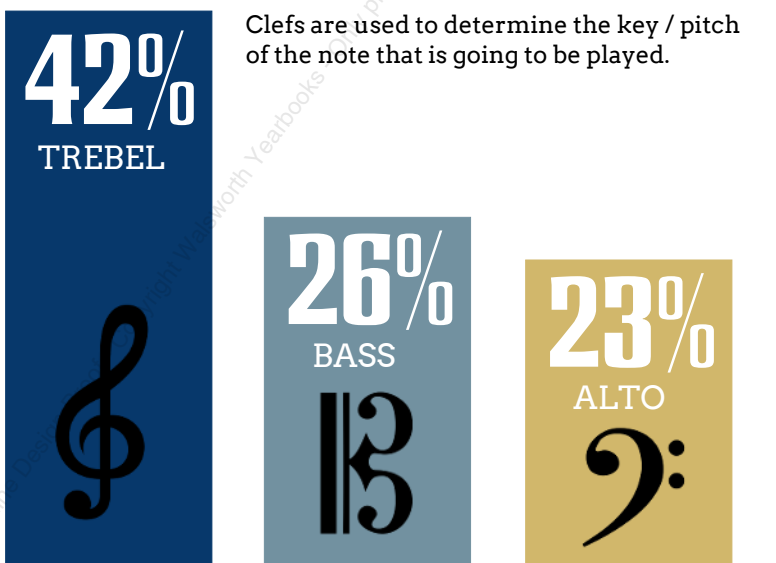

Choir director Karen Stacks shared what it was like to teach aspiring artists at Legacy High School. She said, "It is always awesome as a choir teacher to see my students succeed when they didn't think it was possible." photo by abigail sibel

WHATS YOUR CLEF?

Musicians share what clef they use

*Out of 15 respondents

Clefs are used to determine the key / pitch of the note that is going to be played.

WELL PREPARED
 At the time of the winter concert, the band was prepping for Nationals. Junior member Lauris Moulton said, "The music felt very well developed for where we were at in preparing." photo by ellison ramsey

HO HO HO
 Senior Benicio Gutierrez dressed up as Santa Clause for the winter concert. "I love expressing myself in various forms and music is one that is close to my heart," said Gutierrez. photo by abigail sibel

TRUE DEDICATION
 In his seventh year of playing, sophomore Ian Hall reflected on his fellow band members. "I have been very impressed with the musicianship displayed by my peers not in only the Legacy wind ensemble, but the band as a whole," said Hall. photo by abigail sibel

FRESH START
 Junior singer Sean Murray has been singing all throughout high school. "I got into it because I liked acting. I did musicals and this will be my first year in choir," said Murray. photo by ava rotman

TESTING IT OUT
 Senior percussionist Eliot Pontarelli explained how the band is experimenting with instruments used in newer pieces. "For our new song Lux Perpetua I got to use a double bass bow on a vibe which is super cool. I love being able to be creative with the music," said Pontarelli. photo by ellison ramsey

WHATS YOUR JAM?

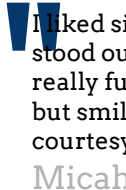

Students share their favorite song they performed this year

"Bloom' by Steven Bryant is my favorite song to play. Getting to play it on my euphonium and getting to be around all my friends is the best." photo by ellison ramsey
 Kathleen Brening, 11th

"My favorite song we played was 'Doxey' I just remembered that I really liked playing the song." photo by abigail sibel
 Aidan Crump-Bertram, 10th

"I liked singing 'Himne' because it stood out and it felt powerful and really fun to sing. I couldn't help but smile afterwards." photo courtesy of micah behunin
 Micah Behunin, 11th

"Sing Me to Heaven' for sure. Each part has their own unique role. All of our voices clash in such a beautiful way." photo by ellison ramsey
 Dominic Sambrano, 12th

