

WARREN TECH

Students participate in technical programs through Warren Tech to advance or learn more about their desired fields. Sammy Hirsch is taking part in the culinary program. "It's great because I've learned so many new recipes and techniques," Sammy said. Other students are similarly immersed in their programs. "I'm working toward my CPR and EMR certifications which I should get at the end of February," fire science student, Jude German, said. Caleb Ashby completed the 3D printing course, "I am designing a lunar bamboo greenhouse for NASA and I'm using a software called Solid Works," Caleb said.

Thriving Thespians. Drama Club hosts several events over the course of the year. Their showcase and induction night is by far the biggest and most important. Members like Bella Ayala are given the opportunity to show off their talents. "I did a monologue called Green Beans. This was my first time doing the showcase and I thought that my performance was really good," Bella said. For others, it was bittersweet. "I performed Carrie from Carrie the Musical which is a song I have been working on for a while. My performance of Carrie went really well. It was sad to have my last induction night as a senior but it was fun to run it and cool to see the other side," AJ Jett said.

GET CRAFTY

Amateur Artists. National Art Honor Society hosts a kids craft night to give parents a night off and encourage creativity with elementary school students. Members of the club like Zosia Karns and Hannah Strumpher volunteered to show the kids how to make certain crafts. "What I did personally was the African face masks out of cardboard and origami for the little kids. I personally found it really enjoyable. My favorite thing was just seeing how happy they were after they completed something and then how they've shown everyone how proud they are of it," Hannah said. Similarly, Harriet Seiffert explained, "The best part for me was seeing the kids' creativity and how much they were enjoying it. I do think there will be another kids craft night next school year with how much fun the kids have and how much fun the people in NAHS have."

The evening is a success for the the members of the troupe. Trevor Nichols, Sophie Kent, Abigail Goltz, and Aiden Hohnstein participated along with other junior high students in the club. "I did a song. I sang Singing in the Rain. My favorite part was the motions I did because I had an umbrella and I was dancing with the umbrella," Trevor said.

PROSPECTIVE PARENT PARTY

Prospective Families Night helps incoming students see what our school is like. Students like Sonia Mathai, Shaelee Torres, and Leia Michel volunteered to give tours to families interested in the school. "I really enjoyed giving tours. I think it's a great way to get hours as well as finding out who's going to come to JA. The best part is being able to explain all about JA and answer questions that parents or kids have. I think Prospective Parent Night went really well and the new system we tried helped a lot," Shaelee said.
