

new little freshies

leaders come to help. Sometimes a new atmosphere can be a bit overwhelming. Alamosa's Link Crew has that covered by taking a smaller group of students to talk to. This gives everyone an opportunity to ask questions and find their answers.

game time
In the gym everyone lines up by their friends in hopes of being on the same team. A group of freshmen boys look down the line to get a sneak peek at who they will be partnered up with for the balloon game. A group of Link Crew clutter at the end to some new comers.

welcome back

Q & A

Aiden Pintor

Q: What was your favorite part about orientation?

A: Being able to see my friends again, and hanging out with them.

Kaylee Ruybal

Q: What was your favorite part about orientation?

A: Going off campus with my friends to eat lunch for the first time.

Makaio Estrada

Q: What was your favorite part about orientation?

A: The girls.

nom nom
Freshmen Julia Sanchez and Braelyn Martinez play the famous Oreo game where the contestants must work strategically and competitively as they race to get the Oreo into their mouth from their forehead without using their hands. Watching them struggle makes this game both funny and entertaining.

taking charge

behind the scenes

Here some of the best duos from the Link Crew and Yearbook Crew showed up at orientation and worked together to create a positive, welcoming atmosphere and take pictures to remember this thrilling experience. While one provides the exciting fun, the other preserves it, orientation wouldn't be successful without them.

incoming
New freshmen eagerly await for the start of their first high school orientation. Some read over the student handbook while others take in the new atmosphere of their auditorium. After spending three months off they got all dressed up to come see their friends and peers that they missed and haven't seen.

