He can do it all! Patrick Morris (8) has already started two new things this year, and they are both going amazing for him. With such an academic role, he earned a spot in Nation Junior Honor Society, and student council. "We were just planning the toiletry drive, and now we already moved onto Christmas projects and how we can help over the holidays. I am looking forward to the next meeting, but it really feels like it goes fast" Patrick stated with a smile. He wishes that everyone enjoys what's to come as much as he does. "It's not just the spirit weeks or dances, we work beyond them and plan them to make it more memorable for the school."

Honor Society

The more the merrier! National Junior Honor Society (NJHS) is a club for kids who exceed in academics and enjoy helping out the school in one way or another. They do as many projects as possible all with the help of one another. The society focuses on building teamwork and great leadership. It's all to help prepare kids for their futures and always having a kind heart.

1. Watch out world! Helping others is important in Alyssa Ing's (8) eyes. She has big hopes for NJHS it not only helps others but helps her too. "Knowing that I can help others, especially those in need of help, makes me feel good, and who doesn't like feeling good?"

2. So much to say! Owen Loftis (8) had so much to say about NJHS. "My favorite part about NJHS is helping people and being there when people need it." He stated everything they do is fun!

What's so funny? Mason White (8) was helping out with Honor Society when Brianna Harper (8) tagged along. They were only supposed to walk around the school and collect the items for the toiletry drive but instead it turned into a moment they will laugh at in their next classes. Brianna couldn't stop laughing at Mason because every time he tried to count the number of items in the bin he always forgot a number, but at the end they eventually got the total number. They both said helping out in NJHS always turns into something more.
