

Mummifying A Hot Dog

Mummifying a hot dog is a really fun thing to do and a great way to end a topic about Egypt. There were a lot of fun steps that were true to a real mummifying process to have fun while also learning. Some of these steps included wrapping it in linen and making your hot dog mummy different objects like a mask so the spirits can find the deceased. You make other possessions like a scroll and jewels for your mummy to take with them to the after life.

Martin Luther King Jr. was all about being equal and people getting along. He did so many amazing things with his life and there are many reasons to celebrate him. So, to show the importance of his life, Mrs. Chesler's class did a project that combined pieces from each student. They colored worksheets, cut them out, and put all of them together to make one beautiful piece of artwork in order to show how we celebrate Martin Luther King's dream of everyone being equal. By combining everyone's work together, they were able to represent the idea that we are all stronger together and although one alone may be cool, put it together, and you'll have something beautiful. This was a super cool idea to celebrate and show how we still honor Martin Luther King Jr.'s life to this day.

What was your favorite part of mummifying a hot dog?

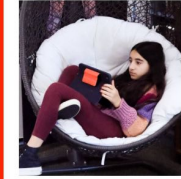

"My favorite part of it was the wrapping of it because it made it feel like it was an actual mummy."

Hailey Romero, 7th

"My favorite part of mummifying a hot dog was definitely wrapping it in toilet paper because it was super fun."

Owen Whiteford, 7th

"The best part was being able to do it with all my friends. They made it super fun and exciting."

Cooper Sukenik, 7th

"My favorite part was customizing the artifacts because I got to make it how I imagined it should look."

Immerse Me with Mrs. Garcia

How many languages do you speak?

Immerse Me is a fun program that Mrs. Garcia introduced to her Spanish classes. The challenge was to get as many points in Immerse Me in as many languages possible. Students were required to get a minimum of 250 points, but were encouraged to get more. Freddy Esquivel placed second overall and won a $100 Amazon giftcard. Sunset was sent courses to do Immerse Me on. Immerse Me included lessons that may apply to real life scenarios like going shopping, or going to a restraint. Immerse Me was a fun challenge to do, and a fun competition to have with friends.
