Scream and shout.
Celebrating a point, Idony
Schow ('26) hugs her teammate.
A key part of the game is coming together to keep the energy up.
"[We support each other on the court by] generally huddling and being like 'it's okay if we missed that point' and realizing that nothing is going to be a perfect game, but we can still work together to win," said Schow.
photo by: anja hedlind

Let's get h.pped. In the tunnel, Sophia Shumaker ('26) gets pumped. It is a tradition to get energy going before each game. "The tunnel is a little bit scary because everyone's slapping you and stuff, but it's a lot of fun once you get through it," said Shumaker. photo by: naomi corby

Up, up, and away. Off of the ground, Kylie Glenn ('27) sets the ball. Glenn keeps her goals in sight to help push her and her teammates to the win. Glenn said, "[During the game I] just make sure I get the ball where it needs to go and gain the most points possible." photo by: selena quintanilla spread by: naomi corby, anja hedlind, & selena quintanilla

them RIGHT

The JV and C-Squad volleyball teams improve in their athletic abilities and establish friendships within the groups.

JV & C-SQUAD VOLLEYBALL

FALL

all the WAY THROUGH Ellery Anderson's ('26) guide to a perfect serve.

Serve's up. Tossing the ball, Ella Pace ('25) starts her serve. Serving is a main part of the game that involves athletes from all different positions. Pace said, "It's pretty stressful, especially with [being a setter]... it's kind of tricky, but it's probably one of my favorite parts." photo by: bailey shepherd

New experiences. Reaching above the net, Mae Boynton ('27) taps the ball over. Throughout the season, Boynton played on both JV and varsity. "[This season's] been lots of fun. I play with JV but I swing up to varsity so I play with both teams and it's fun interacting with both of them and learning new things," said Boynton. photo by: anja hedlind

All about power. In the air, Mackenzie Woolfolk ('26) reaches for the ball. Staying focused throughout a game is a key to success in volleyball. "[I mostly focus on trying] to get the ball over, if we're playing a hard team [I] just try to get an aggressive ball," said Woolfolk photo by: bailey shepherd

Let's get excited. Celebrating, Madeline Sprinz ('26) cheers with her team. An important aspect of playing a team sport is building close connections with all the players. Sprinz said, "All the team dinners and stuff we've done and just hanging out as a team brings us all closer together." photo by: anja hedlind

©coming TOGETHER

How the team captain impacted the team and their season.

"It was really good to make bonds with the underclassmen, it made me step up as a leader and it made me a better player."

Sydney Hill ('25)

36 37