ART or TECH?

Anna Brenneman

"It's hard to say which class I prefer. There are avenues for creativity in both. I really like the openness and exploration of the art classes, but I also enjoy the problem solving aspect from tech. Tech comes easier to me than art, because there is normally a right and a wrong answer."

"For sure I like incorporating tech into art but I don't like straight up tech. I don't like the coding and other stuff. I am more on the creative side. I have taken drawing, painting, graphic design, photography, AV production, and the musical."

"I have not taken a formal tech class since first quarter of my freshman year. I have taken about five or six art classes and three photography classes as my tech credits. I just like the creativity of art more. I like to draw, paint, and take photos. In each art class you can take it multiple times to get better. I've taken drawing twice and I plan on taking painting twice so I can experiment with watercolor or oil paint."

"I have more freedom in art rather than tech. I also get to chat in art with my friends and I don't get to do that in tech. I think both have their benefits but for art you just get to come up with your own ideas and be really creative with it, while in tech you have an already set plan and program that you have to deal with. It feels like there are more rules to follow. I think that some people might like tech better because they don't really have to follow that inquiry that you have to follow in art. You actually have to research and do work in those classes so I just prefer art. I've always kind of preferred art over tech. When I was younger I always had an 'art is the best' mentality, and I'm not really sure why I think I just didn't like my other classes. But just this year I started realizing that I like both when I was looking for colleges, but art has always been closer to me."
